Summer Services for Penn Law Students

The library is always happy to help you discuss, brainstorm, and troubleshoot any research projects you might have.

Ask A Librarian Service: Email or chat online with a reference librarian. Our chat service is typically available between 9am-4:30pm M-F. You can also email questions to askbiddle@law.upenn.edu

- Great for receiving assistance with thorny research questions that you encounter in your summer work, in any environment.

Research Guides: Need to get started with your research? Research guides provide information on different areas of legal research and recommending print and electronic resources.

Some guides of interest:

- Accessing E-Resources: This guide provides instructions for how to log into electronic resources when you are not on a networked computer. If you experience an issue, you can also request assistance.

- Research Assistants: This guide is meant to provide some guidance and some useful links for individuals who are working as research assistants for professors or centers in the law school.

- Foreign and International Law Research Basics: Intro to how to start your research on this topic

Student Scan on Demand: During summer session, students can request chapters of books or journal articles from the library’s print collections to assist with research. This service is free and available only during the summer term.

Note: this service will not be available until library staff are able to safely work on-site
