Introduction

Nationally, approximately 40% of new attorneys work at firms consisting of more than 50 lawyers. Therefore, a large percentage of practicing attorneys work for small firms (fewer than 50 attorneys).

Small firms generally do not have formalized recruiting procedures or a set “hiring season” when they recruit summer law clerks, school-year law clerks, or entry-level attorneys. Instead, these firms often hire on an “as needed” basis, and they hire year-round.

To secure employment with a small firm, students and lawyers alike need to be proactive in getting their name and interests out in the community. Applicants should not only apply directly to these firms, but they should connect via law school, community, and bar association activities.\(^1\) Below are state-by-state hyperlinks to regional directories, bar associations, newspapers and job banks that can be used to jump-start a small firm search.

\(^1\) In addition to applying to firms in the local area, another excellent way of integrating into a local legal community is to secure a state judicial clerkship in the region where the applicant wishes to practice. See The 2008 Guide to State Judicial Clerkship Procedures (http://www.vermontlaw.edu/blank_template.cfm?doc_id=94 subscription required) for state-by-state state court judicial clerkship information.
