VIII. Conclusion

A postgraduate public interest fellowship is a great way to start, or continue, a career in public service. It is important to start thinking about this process as early as possible, and to use your time in law school to explore the myriad of fellowship opportunities that exist for law graduates.

This handbook is meant to get you started in pursuing a postgraduate fellowship. In the next sections, you will find a list of relevant resources to use in thinking about and obtaining a fellowship, a list of deadlines and websites for fellowship providers and a list of Penn graduates who have or have had fellowships.
